“My stomach would grumble” – Sanaa

We often say “kids should just be kids.” But for nearly one in seven New Jersey children, that isn’t always an option. They don’t always have access to nutritious food, which affects their behavior and overall health.

Here’s what some of the children who receive nourishing food through our programs told us:

“It’s healthy food,” shared 6-year-old Asaya. “I like the different kinds of fruit they provide. My favorite is oranges.”

Six-year-old Alzaniyah is happy the meals give her the fuel she needs to do her homework and play games with her friends. “When I’m hungry, I feel sad and can’t think,” she said.

“I’m relieved that we have the food program here because some kids don’t really eat anything at all,” 16-year-old Christopher said. “It makes me feel better that the kids are well-fed and energized.”

“I come here every day because my mom has to work,” Sanaa, 9, told us. “I like the food here – it makes us strong and healthy, and it gets us going for when we need to exercise.”

“When I’m hungry my stomach is grumbling,” she added. “Sometimes I’m so hungry I feel like I’m going to pass out.”

“Getting food would be a challenge” – Robert

Our veterans survived combat, but many returned home to another war – the war against hunger. The somber numbers reveal a truth that hits close to home: One in five Community FoodBank of New Jersey client households has a loved one who has served or is currently serving in the military.

Robert is one of them. He served in the Army from 1954 to 1957, and regularly visits Toni’s Kitchen in Montclair for food and company.

“I just thought it would be a nice place to try, to see what it’s like,” Robert said.

“It helps to conserve on my food bill,” he added. “I like the food that they serve.”

A Message From Debra

Dear FoodBank Friends,

For more than 40 years, with Kathleen DiChiara as our pioneer, the Community FoodBank of New Jersey has been on the front line of combating hunger and poverty across the state. Through our network of food pantries, soup kitchens and other nonprofit programs, we fill the nutrition gap our struggling neighbors face.

But right now, food-insecure families nationwide feel threatened by potential cuts to federal nutrition programs. What would happen if they lose access to SNAP (formerly, food stamps) and other critical programs that help them thrive? Forty-one million Americans, including nearly 1 million New Jersey residents, would struggle even more to provide for themselves and their families.

What if the FoodBank disappeared? Forty-one million meals would go unserved in New Jersey. More than 1,000 community partners would not have the food they need to feed people in their communities. One in seven children would go hungry.

This hypothetical is personal for me because I faced hunger as a child. I stood in food pantry lines to gain nourishment. If it weren’t for the food assistance I received, I would not be where I am today, leading the FoodBank to end hunger in New Jersey.

Thankfully, the FoodBank is here and provides food, help and hope to families in need. As we head into our busiest season, we want you to know that your support impacts lives every day. That’s why we’ve dedicated this issue of The Feed to the stories of men, women and children we serve.

Wishing you and yours happy holidays!

Best,

“I would probably be back in jail” – Daryl

“I started selling drugs at a young age so I could buy food,” said Daryl. “I didn’t know anything else.”

His family struggled financially, so he turned to the tough streets of New Brunswick to provide for himself. He was in and out of jail, with no end in sight – until he decided to set an example for his kids.

While in a halfway house, Daryl learned about the Community FoodBank of New Jersey’s free culinary job-training program and enrolled. “I made it here, so I decided to put all my energy into the program to turn my life around,” Daryl said. “It paid off. I graduated at the top of the class.”

After graduation, Daryl worked at the FoodBank as a culinary apprentice for 18 months.

“It gave me an opportunity to learn about the program and the culinary field so I could make it in the real world,” he explained. The FoodBank team helped him find a job to gain more experience; Daryl prepared meals for clients at Eva’s Village in Paterson for almost two years.

Now he’s back at the FoodBank, working as a production manager. In his role, he prepares meals for several nutrition programs including Kids Cafes, which serve nourishing after-school meals to children at risk of hunger. He also mentors Food Service Training Academy students, many of whom can relate to his life journey.

“I’m showing them that they’ve got a chance,” he told us. “They don’t have to stay in the lane they’re in. They can make a positive change like I did.”

“This program ultimately changed my life,” Daryl said. “This is one thing I really love to do. If this wouldn’t have worked for me, I would probably be back out in the streets.”

“Our kids would miss dinner” – Caroline

Caroline is the program specialist at the Boys & Girls Club in Vineland and she sees the need among the children who visit her Kids Cafe site every afternoon.

“There are some kids who struggle with food insecurity,” she said. “As a staff member, knowing that we were having a dinner program was a blessing. And being able to give a kid a full, well-balanced meal is a feeling that can’t be reproduced.”

The meals the children receive ensure they will not go to bed on empty stomachs. “I believe if this wasn’t here, so many of our kids would miss dinner,” Caroline added.

“As an educator, I know how important it is for kids to have nutritious food. Without it, they would struggle to concentrate and would face behavioral issues. I’ve seen it firsthand. And I’ve seen the positive response to this program firsthand.”

“It would be really, really hard to feed my kids” – Nadege

Nadege works hard to provide for her two children. Like many in South Jersey, even though she has a job, she struggles to afford the food her family needs to stay active and healthy. That’s why she’s grateful for the food pantry at Epiphany Lutheran Church in Pleasantville.

She walked into the pantry with her wide-brim straw hat and an easy smile. When she comes to the pantry she breathes a sigh of relief, knowing she will have enough to feed her family.

“When you get paid, you need to pay bills,” she said. “The little money you have left goes to food – and sometimes that’s barely enough to survive.”

At the pantry, she chooses the food items that suit her family’s needs. Nadege asks for milk, eggs, chicken, bread, cereal, and fruits and vegetables. She ensures she receives healthy food from the pantry because she knows how important nutrition is for her little ones, ages four and two.

“I’m just coming here for food for my family,” Nadege added. “Without this place, I wouldn’t eat to save food for my kids because they need the food to grow and succeed.”

“My son and I would be hungry” – Sherry

Sherry, 49, has faced many challenges in her life, but she never fails to smile. She talks about not having enough food for her and her son – and turning to the Community FoodBank of New Jersey for support.

“There was a point in my life in my early 20s that my stomach started sealing up on me because I couldn’t afford food,” Sherry said. “I didn’t know about food banks at that time, but I knew I was hungry and would face the consequences that came with hunger. From that day, I promised myself that my family would never go without food.”

Sherry and her husband performed in a bluegrass band, and it was their pride and joy. But after he passed away, she faced financial struggles and visited the food pantry at our Southern Branch to put food on the table for her and her son.

She then moved to Colorado with her son. When her mother got sick, Sherry returned to New Jersey and visited the FoodBank to supplement her food supply.

“They welcome you with open arms, without questions or judgments,” Sherry said. “I’m thankful that it was available at those points in my life when I needed help.”

Now Sherry works at Walmart in Egg Harbor Township, and she strives to share her positivity with her colleagues and customers.

“I wake up every day, no matter what situation is going on in my life, with a smile on my face,” she told us. “My goal is to make others smile too.”

“Not everyone has money to give, but we all have time. There’s always something that you can do. My philanthropic focus is hunger because I know, without the support I received, my son and I would face hunger.”
